Letter text:

[fol. 162r] By your lre of the xj^th^, I perceave that yow heare the vile false and develishe exclamacons against me by such as I know not, and therfore I can less judge what to think of them in their degrees of their malice, and the Cawses therof. But as it semeth to me, I may saie trewly Acuerunt linguas sicut serpentes: venena aspidum sub labijs eorum, And as it followeth in the same psalme, Cognovi quia facit Dominus iudicium inopis. Surely yf my Conscience did not acertaine me of Godes favor, and protection, against these satanicall or fanaticall spirites, I should think my self in a most wretched state: But I know, and have proved Goddes goodnes so manie yeres to defend my innocencie, that I may boldly saie with david, factus est mihi Dominus in refugium, et Deus meus in adiuctorium spei meae: Et reddet illis iniquitatem ipsorum, et in malitia eorum disperdet eos. I am therfore determined to adhere to God my only patron, and shalbe redie to answer all spirites whersoever I may fynde them blasting, and doubt not but yf they would to my self breath anie of these speeches, in presence of anie honest companie, I would, with apparent treuth confound their blasphemies, And therfore as yow show your self frendlie in reporting these villanies to mee, so you might shew me freindship in effect to my good, Yf yow would advise them to charge me herewith, and yf they do think me guiltie hereof, they neede not feare to accuse me, for I am not worthie to continew in this place, but I will yeild my self ^worthie^ not only to be removed, but to be punished for an example to others that they should not abuse hir Majestie, and the office I hold/ Yf [fol. 162v] Yf they cannot prove all these lyes they utter, Lett them make anie one pointe wherwith to prove me guiltie of falshood, of injustice, of briberie, of dissimulacon, of double dealing in advise in Counsell, either with hir Majestie, or with the Counsellors, Lett them charge me in anie pointe, that I have not dealt as ernestly, for the Quenes majestie to ayde the affliction in the low Contrie, to withstand the increasing power of the K: of Spa: the assurance of the K: of Scottes to be tyed to hir Majestie, with rewarde, yea with the greatest pension, that anie other hath, yf in anie of these I may be proved to have bin behinde or slower than anie, in a discreete manner as becometh a servant and a Counsellor, I wishe my self worthie of a perpetuall reproche, as though I were guiltie of all that they use to bluster against me.
They that saie in a rashe and malicious mockerie, that England is becom regnum Cæcilianum, may please their owne canckred humor with such a devise, But yf my actions be considered, yf there be anie cause given by me of such a nickname, there maie be found out in manie others juster causes to attribute other names than myne.

Yf my buildinges mislyke them, I confess my follie in the expences, bicawse som of my howses ar to com yf God so please, to them that shall not have land to mainteine them. I meane by my howse at Theobaldes, which was begun by me with a meane measure, but increased by occasions of hir majesties often coming, whom to please I would never omit to straine my self to more charges, than building is, And yet not [fol. 163r] not without som speciall direction of hir Majestie, uppon falte founde with the small measure of hir chamber, which was in good measure for me, I was forced to enlarge a roome for a larger chamber, which neede not be envyed for anie riches in it, more than the show of olde okes and such trees, with painted leaves and fuites can give cause.

I thank God I owe nothing to these backbiters, though in deede much to manie honest persones, whom I mynde to paie without briberie or villanie. for my howse in Westminster, I think it so olde as it should not stirr envye, manie having of later tyme byuyt larger both in Citie and Contrie, And yet the building therof cost me the sale of landes worth a Cli by the yere in Stafforde shire, thath I had of good K: Edward my howse of Burghley is of my mothers inheritance who liveth, and is the owner of it, and I but a fermer, And for the building thereon I have sett my walles but uppon the olde fundacons, in deede I have made the rawgh stone walles to be of square, and yet one syde remayneth, as my father left it me, I trust my son shalbe hable to mainteine it, considering there ar in that shire, a dozen larger, of men under my degree.

Now shortly for my sonnes adhering to Northumberland, I mervaile why he should not beare favor to him, that was his brother in law, as long as he knew no falte, my sonn maryed his wyfe when no bodie sawe lykelihood, that Sir Henry Percie should be an Erle. for his purchases, I know he hath ventred uppon no buyenges, than I allowed, but I wishe he had not [fol. 163v] not solde his wyves landes of ancyent title in westmorland in Cornewall, in Northhampton shire and worcester shire, of more valew, than that he hath bought. They that envy him herein yf they be thriveng would not comitt such a follie to buy new racked land for ancient, and at this daie I know he doth repent him self. But I will end with my paper wishing yow could procure som person to utter these thinges to our selves, and not cowardly to backbyte^rs^ Auguste the xiiiij^th^ 1585. Your loving freind W:B:

[Postscript:] Postscriptum.

After I had ended, though my leasure doth not well serve me yet I could not omit to answer one notable absurde ^manifest^ lye, which is that Counsellors ar forced to seeke at my handes meanes for their sutes.

Yf it were considered, how and uppon whom for these late yeres all manner of offices good and badd, spirituall and temporall have bin bestowed, to whom the persones benefitted do belong, and whom they do follow, it will easilye be judged, how rarely I do or have dealt therin. Yf great numbers be bestowed, and not one uppon anie kinsman, servant or follower of myne, than how probable is it than, that I had habilitie to do that, wherwith I am thus slandered? In verie trewh, I know my creditt in such cases so meane, and others I fynde so ernest and hable to obteine anie thing, that I do uterly forbeare to move for anie, Wherupon manie my good freindes do justly challenged me as unwise, that I [fol. 164r] I seek to place neither man nor woman, in the Chamber, nor without to serve her Majesty, whereby I might do my friends good, and therefore in deed I have few [partial] friends, and so I find the want thereof, and yet I cannot remedy it knowing my power not answerable thereto.

True it is that her majesty throws upon me a burden to deal in all ungrateful actions, to give answers unpleasant to suitors that miss. Where others are used to signify pleasing answers affirmatively. My burden is also this, that in all suits for land, leases, or such things, her majesty commandeth me to certify the state thereof from her under officers, and so I do as it becometh, truly. And if the party obtain I am not thanked, if not, the fault though falsely imputed to me. If these reasons may not clear this slander, I would this only reason were weighed, that is true, for myself, I have not made nor obtained any suit of her majesty these then yeres. In my whole time, I have not for these xxvj yeres been benefitted from her majesty so much as I was within foure yeres of King Edward.

I have sold as much land in valew, as ever I had of gifte of her majesty. I am at charges by attendance in Court, and by keeping of my household especially in terme times by resort of suitors, at more than any Counselor in England. My fee for the treasurership is no more than hath been these three [C] yeres, whereas the Chancellors and others hath been double augmented within these few yeres. And this I do affirm that my fee of the Treasurership doth not answer to my charges of my stable, I meaneth not my table. And in my household I do seldom feed less than a C person, and for that purpose I buy in London my bread, my drink, my acates, my fewell. And in the Contrie I buy my graine, my beefe, my mutton and all acates, and for my stable I buy my hay for the greatest part my ottes, my straw totally. For my servants I keep none to whom I pay no wages, and give livres, which I know manie do not. These things considered I ought not thus to be slandered or envied. What my pains in service are, and how small leisure or pleasure I take, is to manifest, and in deed I condemn my self therein. But I cannot remedy it, otherwise than I might leave my offices, which in the presence of God I could be content to do, so as thereby I might not be touched with note of dishonesty, or displeasure of her majesty.

Yow see how I am caryed by these provocations, to write more than I intended, And yet I write nothing but I will affirm in the presence of any Company good or bad.
